

'Jack' expands, but neighbors win anyway

A use permit to double the size of the Jack-in-the-Box restaurant on Mission Street between Garibaldi and Price streets was approved by the Daly City City Council Monday night, but the applicant didn't get everything it asked for and the neighbors did.

The eatery operation will be expanded to cover the entire block fronting on Mission, with possibly 34 new parking spaces and landscaping to be added, but there will be no driveway onto Garibaldi and the Price entrance will be for deliveries only.

That means, despite the fervent appeal of John Mocnik, real estate manager of Foodmaker, Inc., the parent organization of Jack-in-the-Box, that the only customer ingress and egress will be on Mission.

Putting the only customer exits on Mission "would wipe out the advantages of 34 new parking spaces," Mocnik protested, adding that a two- or three-foot wall as proposed along the Garibaldi frontage "would be a maintenance headache, with graffiti, painting and kids sitting on it."

He also argued that a no-parking zone on narrow Garibaldi might help cut down traffic problems. But Steve Courter, 17 Garibaldi, told the council there are red curbs in the area being ignored by customers going to the Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant on the north corner of the Mission-Garibaldi intersection.

Mocnik observed that the fried chicken outlet on a small lot with limited on-site parking has customers lined up on both sides of Garibaldi at lunchtime, and that he didn't see more congestion coming from Jack-in-the-Box because the doubled capacity of the restaurant building is intended to encourage customers to eat inside.

This would cut down the outside litter problem complained about in the past by the neighbors, he said. Mocnik also stated that he thought that 99 percent of the cars leaving the lot on Garibaldi would turn left toward Mission, so the traffic impact on the surrounding neighborhood would be minimal.

"If you approve this exit on Garibaldi and if there are problems in six months, we would look at it at that time," Mocnik promised.

But the council was unconvinced.

On Councilman Albert Teglia's motion, the vote was unanimous to approve the use permit with 15 conditions, including the wall instead of the driveway on Garibaldi.

The other conditions include some that have been operative for some time, since the restaurant had been threatened with closure because of late-night noise and litter problems.

It now closes at 11 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and midnight Friday and Saturday, posts security guards Friday and Saturday nights and cleans up litter twice a day on several streets in the area.

Final design plans still must be approved by the city.

Foodmaker has acquired five adjoining lots for the expansion, four of them fronting on Mission, one 25-by-100-foot parcel behind them on Garibaldi, subject of a requested rezoning from residential to commercial. The rezoning was denied, but with a condition attached to the use permit that it be used for parking only by the restaurant.

The 'singing senior' is on the circuit

By TERRY DAVENPORT
Post Staff Writer

Dressed in bathrobes and slippers, with their hair tousled and their knees covered with hand-crocheted afghans, they did not look like an average audience.

Some wheezed and coughed as they sat in the wheelchairs. Others dozed.

But most sat up straight and stared intently at the silver-haired, trim man in the V-neck orange sweater and checked pants who sauntered into the room and picked up the microphone.

His blue eyes twinkled as he smiled and said, "I'm Gene Almy. They call me the Singing Senior."

And the residents of the St. Francis Heights Convalescent Home in Daly City gasped when he began to sing "Pennies from Heaven" in a mellow, resonant voice, accompanied by a schmaltzy orchestra on a tape recorder.

"He sounds just like Bing!" exclaimed one white-haired woman. Indeed, 70-year-old Gene Almy of Daly City does sound like Bing Crosby. He's proud of the fact.

"As a young man, when I was about 20, folks said I was the nearest thing to Bing in the country," he said.

SOME PEOPLE accused Almy of deliberately imitating Crosby's "bub-bups," whistles and even his hairstyle as he crooned his way from the El Capitan Theater in San Francisco to top billing at the Palace Theater in Dallas.

But on the eve of his big break — an engagement at the Palace Theater in New York — he fell ill at the age of 24 and, upon a doctor's advice, had surgery that was supposed to cure a sinus infection.

Instead, the surgeon's knife left half his face paralyzed for three years and ended his short career.

The Reno native worked himself through college in Southern California by pumping gas and working as a night clerk for a hotel. Then he was an x-ray technician until the work made him ill. A doctor diagnosed acute leukemia.

The disease was arrested as soon as he quit the job but Almy said he still suffers from tired spells. "It's like having severe anemia," he said.

Eventually, Almy earned a Ph.D. in philosophy and became a practicing psychologist on Sutter Street in San Francisco. He never felt comfortable in that role. "I guess I'm too sensitive to people's problems and illnesses," he confessed.

He was haunted by bad luck. His first wife and both of his children died. His son died of pneumonia when he was 17. His daughter died a slow death six years ago due to a malignant brain tumor.

He married again and earned a million dollars by speculating in real estate and the stock market. He lost the money due to bad investments. He and his wife were divorced.

Almy found himself alone and facing retirement without a pension. He was grateful when at the age of 59, Bank of America hired him for its collection department.

THOUGH many years had gone by, he still vividly recalled those glittering moments at the Palace Theater, the thrill of seeing his picture in newspapers and his name on marquees.

One Dallas newspaper critic wrote in 1934, "The big news of the week for the Palace femme fans is the return of Gene Almy, baritone crooner, who has been giving the Houston gals something to dream about while he filled a three weeks' engagement at the Metropolitan Theater."

Another newspaper reported that the critics' constant references to him as "Bing Crosby's double" caused Almy to begin one appearance before a Kiwanis Club by twisting a leg off a piano and threatening assault on anybody who called him a Crosby imitator.

Almy swears that he didn't start out trying to impersonate Crosby. Recalling criticism of the way he combed his hair, so that it puffed up on the right side, he said, "I combed my hair that way long before I ever heard of Bing. He had a toupee most of his life. If anything, he copied me."

But he admits he began throwing in Crosby's "bub-bups" and whistles because "people begged me to."

He had a great deal of affection for the master crooner even before he met him.

THEIR SOUNDS were so similar that he substituted for the young Crosby on short notice in 1931 at the Coconut Grove in Los Angeles.

He first met Crosby after his sinus operation through Crosby's brother, Bob. Almy and Bob Crosby were vocalists with Anson Weeks Orchestra on a nationally broadcast radio show in the 1930s.

Bing invited Almy to sit in on a recording session and the filming of a movie. "He said he listened to me singing 'Just One More Chance' and that I was halfway through the song before he realized it wasn't himself," Almy recalled proudly.

Although he stood just three feet from Crosby when he recorded one tune, Almy said he could barely hear him. "We both sang softly and we had trouble holding notes for very long so we wound up with similar phrasing," he said.

Unlike one Crosby imitator who tried to turn Bing's "bub-bups" and swooping notes into a commercial profit, Almy said he and Bing "got along just fine."

The two singers had more in common than their soothing, mellow voices. Both came from families with seven children, both had first wives who died and both approached life with the same, easy-going attitude.

Although Almy lost track of Crosby in later years, he always felt close to him. When Bing died in October 1977, Almy said, "It seemed like part of myself had died. He's always been my idol. I worshipped him."

HE REALIZED that he still had the ability to sing at a "Tribute to Bing Crosby" fundraiser for a local radio station held at the Avenue Theater in San Francisco.

"I didn't sing along with the others until they played 'White Christmas.' This lady sitting a few seats away gave a little scream when she heard me. The others stopped singing and listened to me."

It was only a few months later that Almy was invited to sing before a large group in San Francisco.

As he eyed the crowd of 150 persons, Almy was understandably nervous. After all, he hadn't performed for 45 years.

"I had a very unusual experience," he said. "When I first went up to the stage, I didn't know if I could remember my lines, but when I started to sing I was right at ease. The words just flowed out and the voice was magnificent. I truly feel that it was Bing singing."

Almy brought the house down. He said listeners came up to him after his performance with tears in their eyes and told him he had given them goosebumps.

Almy said, "I'm not religious but I have to confess this was too good a voice to be me. It gave me the confidence to go on, although I must admit I have not had the same experience since."

From then on, Almy's whole life has revolved around singing to those who remember Bing. He performs for senior citizens' clubs and convalescent homes all over San Mateo County. And he never charges a dime.

AT A RECENT performance for residents of the St. Francis Heights Convalescent Home in Daly City, he had seniors tapping their toes and singing along to "Pennies from Heaven," and waltzed with a nurse around the recreation room as though it were a ballroom.

(He can be seen Sept. 6 at 7 p.m. at the Retirement Inn of Daly City, 501 King Drive, Daly City.)

Almy spent his last savings on a public address system and tape deck and uses his meager $276-per-month income from Social Security and his Bank of America pension to buy old records.

Many people compliment him on the professional accompaniment he has. He said one blind man thought it was a real orchestra, rather than a tape-recorded one.

It isn't easy to find old tunes. Almy listens carefully to KOIT's "beautiful music" on the radio, then calls up the station to learn who recorded a favorite old record.

He spends hours in used record stores tracking down old favorites. It recently took him five hours to find a rendition of "Please."

Almy said fellow members of the Daly City Senior Citizens Club and the American Association for Retired Persons have told him they think it's odd that he would rather spend his last few dollars on old records instead of food.

Despite that sacrifice, he almost lost his singing career a second time this past spring, when his rent was raised.

Almy was so broke that he decided he would have to sell his p.a. system. Without amplification, he feared audiences would no longer be able to hear his soft voice.

BUT AT the last minute, he learned about the federally-subsidized Amberwood Apartments for senior citizens in Daly City. They found a spot for him and solved his financial problem.

Almy doesn't worry about sounding like Bing Crosby anymore. As he croons old Crosby tunes like "Stardust," he isn't shy about "bub-bupping," and even admits, "It comes in handy when I forget the words."

He whistled, too, until he got his dentures. His new lower set of teeth provided an embarrassing moment once when they popped halfway out as he strained for a high note.

Almy recovered quickly. At the end of the song, he took the dentures out and tried to auction them off. His Medicare-aged audience roared with laughter.

Although some of the oldsters snore through his performances, Almy gains great satisfaction from the smatters of applause and the kind words people have for him.

Other listeners don't — or can't — say anything. That doesn't bother Almy.

"I can tell by the look in their eye or the squeeze of their hand that I'm getting to them," he said.

Number Two calling card is unwanted

A dropper of doggie-do is Number Two in the hearts and minds of residents of old Daly City these days.

Original Daly City Protective Association Vice President Ernest Pezzola complained to the City Council Monday night that someone has been leaving a half-sack of dog manure in the streets about once a week for the past two years.

He asked that the city post a reward for the culprit.

Pezzola said the phantom left his calling cards generally every Tuesday night until recent weeks, when he moved to Friday nights.

North Parkview Avenue was the usual chosen target area for the first year, but more recently the bags have been found on South Parkview Avenue, Miriam Street, Vista Grande and Santa Barbara Avenue, Pezzola went on.

"It takes two people to pick it up," he continued. "Once a sack was left in the street near a church. Sometimes, cars will run over it and track it all over the neighborhood."

Mayor Victor Kyriakis said he thought this might be the work of someone with a kennel and perhaps many dogs.

Councilman Anthony Giammona wondered aloud why no one had called police or City Hall on this yet.

The council was unmoved by the request for the reward, but asked the press to spread the word about the clandestine canine sanitation technician, in hopes someone would spot a drop-off and call it in.

City votes denial to tattoo parlor

The California Tattoo Studio, 6556 Mission St., soon may be no more after a 3-2 vote by the Daly City Council Monday night to uphold a denial of a business license for the establishment.

The denial was based on a recommendation by Police Chief David A. Hansen that the license not be issued. Police Capt. Ed Guzman, reading a memo from the vacationing Hansen, said the disapproval by police was because tattoo parlors in general "operate in a quasi-vice area."

Guzman said, "Our experience has been that these places attract people who don't operate within the law and draw people with police records and narcotics users who want to cover the (narcotics) track marks on their arms with tattoos."

But a distraught Brian Freeman, owner of the studio, and his attorney, Milton Katz of San Francisco, argued vehemently against the denial, Katz charging that this was not a "reasonable" exercise of the city's police powers under the law and that the police recommendation was arbitrary and not based on evidence or facts.

Hansen's perception of the studio "is based on some stereotyped notion of years ago" and launched into a long history of tattooing to show it to be a traditional art form in many parts of the world.

But Mayor Victor Kyriakis cut Katz off as he reached the early 20th century, and Katz finished his presentation with a note that a dozen other businessmen in the area had

CONSERVING SIGHT

The Daly City Skylions are preparing for the annual White Cane Days, will be Oct. 5-6. All proceeds from the White Cane Days go directly into sight conservation projects. Often simple tests such as the one above can warn of impending problems.

Persons interested in helping this Lions' project can write P.O. Box L, Daly City 94017 or bring used eyeglasses to Vern's Coffee Shop, 6841 Mission St., Daly City. Del C. Wilson is this year's sight conservation chairman.

One long, last fling

In the final days of summer vacation the city is enjoying one long, last fling at being a sleepy community. Next week it is back to school and back to busy social calendars.

Members of the Holy Angels Women's Guild will begin the year with a special election to replace vice president Mrs. Bonnie Hammill. The Hammill family was transferred to Florida during the summer and hence the vacancy on the guild's executive board.

In the meantime, the first social function to be sponsored by the parish women will be the annual breakfast for the mothers of children enrolling in the parish school for the first time. School will open at 9 a.m. on Wednesday morning and the mothers of first graders will have an hour to get their offspring settled in an orientation class before they gather for a get acquainted breakfast in the parish hall at 10 a.m.

For the remainder of the year the guild will meet on the first Wednesday of each month at 8 p.m. in the parish hall, according to Mrs. Willene Collins, publicity chairperson.

THE REV. John Lo Shavio, the president of the University of San Francisco, will be the guest speaker when the members of the Loyola Guild gather for the opening meeting of the fall term.

Mrs. Cornelius E. Murphy, publicity chairperson, reports that the meeting will be held Sept. 7. The advisory board will meet at 1 p.m. in Room 308 in the University Center on the USF campus. The general meeting, in Room 417, will begin at 1:45 p.m.

Presiding for the first time since her election as guild president, will be Mrs. Joseph McCarthy. Other officers serving during the 1979-1980 year are first vice president, Miss Evelyn Thickett, second vice president, Mrs. Fred Perata; recording secretary, Mrs. Anthony Ballestracci; Financial secretary, Miss Margaret Buckley; treasurer, Mrs. James McCabe and Mrs. Frank Kelechava, the corresponding secretary.

RENEWING AN old tradition next month will be the members of the Fifty Plus Club of Pacifica.

The Rev. Ron Harton, pastor of the Pacifica Baptist Church, and the congregation of that church, have invited the club members to observe the annual Fifty Plus Club Church at the Baptist Church on Sunday, September 16 at 11 a.m.

According to Mrs. Edna Laurel Calhan, Church Day was established by popular vote of the club membership a number of years ago and was a faithfully observed event for some time. In recent years circumstances have combined to make the event more difficult to schedule and the practice of observing Church Day fell by the way side.

Mrs. Doris Hall, Fifty Plus president, has indicated that the church plans to reserve seats for the club members, so that they may sit in one unit at the worship service. To make arrangements simple, club members who are planning to be a part of the Church Day observation are asked to call Mrs. Hall in advance so that the proper number of seats can be reserved.

Learning more about Cook, Drake

by Arville Finacom

When Francis Drake anchored in Bay Area waters 400 years ago, he ushered in an age of English exploration which spread the language and customs of his tiny island kingdom literally around the world.

Two hundred years later, James Cook passed seaward of Drake's landing on his journey north to find the Northwest Passage. Another hundred years went by. It was 1879 and a Scotsman, Robert Louis Stevenson, came to the Bay Area. Drawn by love for the woman he would marry within the year, the young author came to experience for himself this end-of-the-earth place. He stayed a little less than a year, regained his physical health and mental balance, and wrote praises to the serenity of the region's hidden places.

And so, if we like, we can celebrate a quadricentennial, a bicentennial and a centennial as summer, 1979 comes to an end.

Many in the Bay Area are doing so aided by exhibits and experiences designed to put them in personal touch with the essences of Drake, Cook and Stevenson as well as the spirit of the times they represent.

Drake's doings in California have been fuel for historians' speculations almost from the time he got back to England following his famous three-year voyage of circumnavigation.

No one disputes that he landed somewhere locally claiming the land for Elizabeth I and naming it Nova Albion, (Latin for New England), because the sea-coast bluffs he saw reminded him of the channel chalk cliffs of his homeland.

But exactly where he landed is unknown.

Recent research seems to support a climate change over the last 400 years which could put the description of the weather at the camp site — "thick mists and the most stynking fogges" says the expedition chronicler, Francis Fletcher — as easily within San Francisco Bay, probably north of Tiburon near Larkspur, as on the exposed coast at what has been called traditionally Drake's Bay on the Point Reyes Peninsula where this year, in mid June, the National Park Service erected a monument to honor the quadricentennial of Drake's landing.

Interesting arguments for both sides are part of the World of Drake exhibit currently at the Oakland Museum until Sept. 8.

There also is a cutaway model of Drake's flagship, The Golden Hind, costumes of the period to try on, a narrated slide show running continually and two beautifully executed ship models — one of a Spanish galleon, another of the English flagship "Ark Royal" which led the English fleet in repelling the Spanish Armada.

The local California scene is not forgotten. Indian artifacts of the kind Drake must have seen along with some of the other wonders he saw on his voyage — a penguin, a nutmeg, Spanish gold — are part of an interesting pavilion display.

no objections to Freeman's type of business being there.

Freeman pleaded that "I'm running a clean, legitimate business."

Voting for the denial were Councilmen Albert Teglia, Anthony Giammona and William Schumacher. Voting against were Kyriakis and Councilman James Tucker, the latter saying he thought the applicant should have a chance to prove himself.

Outside the council chamber after the denial vote, Katz and Freeman huddled over the possibility of going to court for a writ of mandamus to overturn the council decision. City Attorney Albert Polonsky, who had told the council the police recommendation was within the due process requirements of the law, advised that the studio could stay open pending an appeal, possibly for another two to three weeks.

"I'm wiped out," Freeman lamented. "Everything I have is in that studio." Asked why he brought a business with this kind of reputation to Daly City, he replied, "I came here so I wouldn't have to put up with the sort of thing you find at 7th and Mission (in San Francisco). They said the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag at the start of the meeting. But where's the 'liberty and justice' of it all? The police have tried to ruin me. They parked black and whites (patrol cars) right in front of my place."

Freeman and a partner no longer with the business opened the shop in May under a temporary business license. It was the permanent license Hansen recommended against.

Speech pathology services

Easter Seals of Burlingame has agreed with Mary's Help Hospital to provide speech pathology services for hospital inpatients.

The services include evaluation and treatment of post-Cerebral Vascular Accident victims who suffer from a particular type of aphasia.

Animal Forum

In the eyes

By Dr. David R. Barnett
Question: Is it true that a pet's eyes sometimes indicate a health problem?

Answer: The eyes can reflect many facts about the health of a pet to a skilled observer.

Anemia, infections and jaundice may be discovered by eye examination. Some breeds of cats and dogs have eye disorders that are commonly seen at birth, and veterinarians are trained in early detection of these conditions.

Animal and human eyes also are subject to ulcers, injuries and foreign bodies lodged in the eye or under the eyelids.

AN INSTRUMENT called an ophthalmoscope is used by doctors to observe the deeper structure of the eyes, especially the lens and retina. The retinas are studied for certain eye diseases, and certain changes in the retina often lead to the detection of other health problems. Both the veterinarian and physician also will look for cataracts, particularly in geriatric patients.

The eyes of older dogs, however, will also be examined for cloudy lenses or nuclear sclerosis by veterinarians.

Ear examination is also important. Both dogs and cats have deep, curved ear canals which provide protection to the inner ear but which, unfortunately, also provides a place of refuge for infection and diseases.

Ear infection is common in pets and can often be detected by a foul odor in the ear or shaking and scratching the head.

To properly examine the ear canal, an instrument called an otoscope is required. The veterinarian will usually check all parts of the ear and ear flap for parasites, ulcers, infection and foreign matter.

Incidentally, an animal's nose is not the health barometer most people believe it to be. An animal's nose may be hot or cold, wet or dry, in either sickness or health.

As part of the nose area examination, the veterinarian will check for discharges or other irregularities.

He also may use a light source to examine the nasal passages for any weeds or awns. We will discuss other areas of pet examination in future columns.

Aphasia is the inability to express oneself properly through speech or loss of verbal communication.

Easter Seals speech pathologist John Samples will deal primarily with patients who are experiencing motor aphasia. In these instances, patients know what they want to say but cannot say it; patients are incapable of coordinating the muscles controlling speech. Their condition may be complete or partial.

Ulysses Buggs, chief of Physical Therapy and Occupational Therapy at Mary's Help, last year studied the need for speech pathology services at the hospital.

Buggs and Associate Director Sister Marilyn Emminger were instrumental in making the current agreement possible.

Sister Marilyn presented the proposal for approval before the Executive Committee of the Medical-Dental Staff and the Board of Directors.

Samples responds promptly to referrals from physicians that his services are needed for a particular patient.

On his first visit with the patient, he reads the chart, meets the patient and makes an initial impression. He then determines the frequency with which he should visit with the patient.

"I try to see the patient on a daily basis as much as possible," said the speech pathologist. In addition, Samples makes recommendations for follow-up treatment.

Treatment for the patient consists of a series of therapeutic interventions as prescribed by Samples.

"This could be work with word finding, cognitive development or writing skills," he said.

Samples also develops individualized programs designed to enable the patients to work on their own or with their families.

Complete records of the patient's condition and progress are kept by Samples. This is done to keep a close check on the patient's progress.

Samples is very enthusiastic about the possibilities for the program.

"The signing of the contract is very significant. It marks a new direction for both of us. The agreement is really two health agencies working together for the good of all people in the community," he said.

Humane Society back in full swing

By TERRY DAVENPORT
Post Staff Writer

Trouble began for the Peninsula Humane Society the day after Proposition 13 passed.

Employees saw the handwriting on the wall. Three quit right away and took jobs they had quietly lined up in case the property tax initiative passed. Others called in sick and presumably began looking for work.

Complaint calls immediately jumped 30 percent. And people had reason to complain, for there weren't enough animal control officers on duty.

As a result, angry mothers called in to report that they were afraid to send their children out to play because packs of stray dogs were roaming through the neighborhood.

Dead animals were left decaying in the streets for days before the Humane Society found time to pick them up.

But at the same time citizens began sending in petitions with hundreds of signatures, demanding that service be restored, the county Board of Supervisors chopped the Humane Society's budget by 44 percent.

It was the biggest cut of a county service and one of the most severe sustained by any humane society in the state.

Today, a year and nearly three months after Proposition 13 passed, the organization is running smoothly again.

It provides nearly the same service as before, its kennel and offices are open the same hours as before, and the county is paying only a third of the amount that it paid two years ago to support it.

On top of this, the 19 cities in the county have all agreed upon something they fought about for years: a county-wide uniform animal control ordinance that addresses such issues as dog licensing and leash laws.

How did this happily-ever-ending result?

"It wasn't easy," said George Riley, whose job as director of the county's community services includes administering the animal control program.

During the pandemonium that ensued after Proposition 13, the county flatly refused to continue picking up the entire tab for the program, as it had for the past 20 years.

In recommending a hefty cut in the animal control budget, County Manager David Nichols argued that animal control is, by law, the cities' responsibility, not the county's, and that San Mateo County is one of only a handful of counties in the state that offers this service on a county-wide basis.

He said local cities had been getting a free ride for too long — a point he had brought up in the past but which previously had been ignored.

It was many months before the cities began to share his philosophy. Riley had the unenviable job of negotiating a new contract with them and then getting all 19 cities to sign it.

Under the agreement they finally arrived at, the county kicked in $183,000 and the cities jointly paid $100,000 to bring service almost back to normal by last 69uary.

But this year, the county is insisting that the cities split the $451,000 tab for the entire year's service on a 50-50 basis with the county.

(In addition, the county will turn over to the Humane Society $27,000 from fines and forfeitures and another $630,000 from dog license and impoundment fees, which were increased 50 percent last Jan. 1. The total 1979-80 budget for animal control will be $1,108,000, compared to $1,022,780 in 1977-78, when the county paid $630,906 and the cities paid nothing.)

FACED WITH other cutbacks due to Proposition 13, cities took their time signing the 1979-80 contract with the county, which specifies they jointly will ante up a total of $225,500.

Each city's fee is computed from a formula based on population and assessed valuation. The charges range from $451 for the tiny Town of Colma up to $33,780 for the county's largest city, San Mateo.

The contract contains a disclaimer that states the cities may have to pay up to $300,000 if costs are higher than anticipated. If that is the case, Colma will pay $600 and San Mateo will pay $44,940.

Yet the county has the cities over a barrel because state law requires municipalities to provide a quarantine service (in case a rabid animal bites someone), removal of dead animals from public roads, and treatment of injured animals with no known owner.

THE CONTRACT provides for those services plus others mandated by local ordinances: an animal control shelter, impoundment of strays and the eventual adoption or destruction of strays.

The only two areas that cities are left to regulate on their own are the number of animals per household and exotic animal control.

For the first time, the contract makes the county responsible for collecting dog license fees — something the Humane Society did in the past.

However, the Humane Society has another burden: handling the dispatching of its animal control officers.

Faced with the alternative of setting up their own animal control services, 12 of the county's 19 cities have signed the contract so far.

Most seem pleased with the new arrangement. South San Francisco Police Chief James Datzman said, "Every indication I get is that the service has been very positive. We had a meeting with them (Humane Society representatives) and they have been very responsive."

Pacific City Manager Albert St. Cyr agreed that service has improved, but he said he will be looking into alternative methods of providing animal control service for less money.

San Bruno City Manager Gerald Minford has that idea in the back of his mind, too. "Animal enforcement is always inadequate by somebody's standards. You can go from patrolling every street three times a day to responding only to complaints. You ask yourself, 'Could I get together with Millbrae and pool revenues and get better service?' I ask myself that question. I haven't answered it yet."

On the other hand, Minford added, cities that decide to drop out of the county's program may ruin the economic base that the whole system is based upon.

For the time being, he said he plans to recommend that the San Bruno City Council approve the county's contract.

Half Moon Bay Police Chief John Gonzales has a different point of view. Although he said his city cannot afford to provide its own animal control service, he said it is unhappy with the county's service.

The chief remarked, "Even though we are paying the contract price, we don't see a unit over here on a regular basis like we did before Proposition 13."

He said people frequently drop off unwanted dogs and cats in the sparsely-inhabited coastal area running from Devil's Slide to the Santa Cruz County line. One of his officers recently spotted a man throwing kittens out of a van on Skyline Boulevard.

THE CHIEF said he misses the daily contact his city used to have with a Humane Society officer. "I should think they could assign one person to this area," he declared.

Humane Society Executive Director Richard Ward attributed Half Moon Bay's unhappiness to a temporary manpower shortage that will end as soon as three new employees are hired.

He maintained that the county and the cities are getting a bargain.

Taking inflation and salary increases into consideration, he said they are paying for 80 percent of the service they got in 1977-78 but are receiving 100 percent of that service because the Humane Society is paying for the difference.

"We shouldn't be doing that but we have no other choice," Ward said.

THE ADDED revenues come from private contributions, the organization's sale of pet supplies and charges for services that used to be free: picking up dead animals from veterinarians and private homes, and putting animals to sleep.

Most people don't realize that the Humane Society has a separate operation that would continue to operate even without county and city allocations.

Annual school assembly

Westmoor High School's annual orientation assembly will be Aug. 29 in the Little Theater from 8:30 to 10 a.m.

Orientation is designed primarily for the incoming freshmen. However, all students entering Westmoor in the fall who are unfamiliar with the school can attend.

Schedules of class assignments will be distributed to freshmen at this time.

The members of the Westmoor executive board will be in charge of the orientation this year under the direction of Sue Starn, Student Body president.

The non-profit arm of the organization focuses on educating the public, running a wildlife rescue department and a spay and neuter clinic, and investigating acts of cruelty.

Without county funding, Ward said the Humane Society would continue to run a shelter but it would be much smaller and would be able to hold strays longer before having them euthanized.

Ward pointed out that some cities, such as Palo Alto, use taxpayer funds to pay for these kinds of services in addition to the state-mandated ones.

"The problem is we've been doing some of these things for so long, people think they should be provided without question. They don't realize that, if there were no Humane Society, they wouldn't be provided."

Since the Humane Society was already in the animal business, it was natural for the county to ask it to run its state-mandated animal control service rather than duplicate facilities.

ALTHOUGH Ward says he is pleased that the county was able to negotiate a uniform animal control ordinance and a new financing agreement, he doesn't like the fact that the Humane Society must operate yearly without continuing assurance of funding.

He is convinced that the county would soon realize its mistake if it failed to renew the contract. Several years ago, Ward said Santa Cruz County decided it could offer animal control programs for less money than the local humane society wanted.

"In just one year the county asked the humane society back and paid it all the money it asked for," Ward recalled.

Another of his concerns is that the present system forces responsible pet owners (the ones who pay for shelter services and dog licenses) to pay more for animal control than irresponsible pet owners and the public at large — although all benefit from animal control.

In lieu of the present dog licensing system, he would prefer to see a state-wide tax on pet food.

THE HUMANE Society chief also said he has mixed feelings about the transfer of the dog licensing responsibility to the county.

He explained that his organization fought very hard to bring all animal control services under one roof.

One obvious disadvantage of the new system is that there is a lag time between the time the county processes new dog license applications and copies of records are forwarded to the Humane Society. Thus, a citizen who calls the Humane Society on a weekend to report finding a lost dog may be told, "Sorry, we can't check that dog's license because we don't have the records. You'll have to call the county on Monday."

Although Ward said he doubts most cities are aware of how complicated animal control service is to provide, he noted that he won't stop any city from attempting to offer the service on its own.

"And if they succeed, I'll be the first to congratulate them," he said.

RILEY has a different approach: he's trying to work out compromises that will encourage cities to stick with the county-wide system.

One possibility is to allow cities to pay for different levels of service in future contracts. For example, Woodside doesn't want animal control officers to enforce leash laws.

Another continuing project is trying to convince cities that the money they have begun paying for animal control does not entitle them to additional services.

Riley said he hears of police departments refusing to handle nuisance calls such as barking dogs and telling callers to contact the Humane Society instead.

WHAT THEY have to realize, he said, is that those types of calls are primarily a city's responsibility.

He concedes that it may take him a while to get the message to sink in.

But the same man who was tearing out his hair a year ago, when everyone was angry about animal control service, now declares that the crisis forced the cities and the county to resolve issues they had been arguing about for years.

It sounds strange coming from a county official, but Riley went so far as to call Proposition 13 "a blessing in disguise."

Better Barbecues Always Begin with Lucky Bonded Meats

Over 200 Cuts of Meat, Fish and Poultry!

Holiday barbecues are always extra special...and call for extra special fixings! Especially the meat. And you'll find over 200 cuts of meat, fish and poultry at your neighborhood Lucky Discount Supermarket...each guaranteed for flavor and tenderness.

When it comes to poultry...Lucky never sells anything but the best! USDA Grade A is the government's highest poultry grade...and it's the only grade of whole-bodied poultry we sell. So you're always sure to get poultry that's plump, meaty and tender.

A No-Nonsense Guarantee!

Lucky Bonded Meats are personally inspected and evaluated by Lucky's own Meat Experts to make sure they deliver consistent quality and satisfaction bite after bite...week after week. And we back it with a guarantee that's simple and clear: "If for any reason, you're not satisfied, please return the table with proof of purchase for a full refund."

Valu-Trimmed meat-you pay only for what you eat!

All Lucky meats are Valu-Trimmed. We trim the excess bone, fat and waste before it's weighed or priced. Because real meat value is more than just a lower price per pound. What's really important is the cost per serving. And Lucky Valu-Trimming means more edible meat per pound...and more real meat value.

Need a special cut? No extra charge!

If your extra-special barbecue calls for a special cut that you don't see in our meat case...just ask a Lucky Butcher! He'll be glad to prepare it for you at no extra charge. At Lucky, we only discount the price...never courtesy or service!

When it comes to the extra-special meat you want for that extra-special holiday barbecue...LUCKY HAS IT!

Saturday, Aug. 11, marked a debut into the world of glamor girls in a family which already has many pretty ladies. A baby girl named JENNIFER ROSE was born to ANGELA and LENO CONTE at Mills Hospital. The beautiful infant (10 pounds, 22 inches, at birth) is the 12th grand child for ANTOINETTE LICATA, who owns operates VINCE'S Italian and Seafood restaurant, a major landmark in San Mateo. JIM SNIADDECKI'S SCOTTY CAMPBELL'S restaurant in Redwood City has long been a favorite of Bay Area residents and visiting dignitaries. Port waitresses clad in tartan plaid kilts serve such features as prime rib and steaks. For a delightful luncheon or dinner experience, try the upper level terrace at LA POTINIÈRE French restaurant, located in the arcade complex known as "The Theater." French specialties will captivate your gourmet appetite. Reservations are required. Foxy LEO MARTAY revealed the new changes at his perennially popular LEO'S WHISTLE STOP this week. Over the years this Belmont restaurant has been a self-service format. Now Leo has gone into a "full service" operation, with table settings of flatware and blue cloth napkins. Most attractive of all, a corps of cute waitresses to serve you. All the favorite breakfast, lunch and dinner specialties are still offered at moderate prices.

Connoisseurs of the finer points in selection and preparation of seafoods make a rewarding discovery when they find that the authentic Polynesian tropical decor and gracious service at CAPTAIN CHARLES, a gourmet seafood restaurant surfside at Rockaway Beach, Pacifica, is matched by the excellent food selection. Also owned/operated by the well known GUST family are THE MOONRAKER and NICK'S restaurants. One of the most popular specials at JOHN'S PLACE, the comfortable self-styled "working man's bar" in Burlingame, is the regular Monday night "Spaghetti Feed" for $1.50. It begins at 6 p.m. and lasts as long as the supply holds out (usually 'til around 9 p.m.). When a master chef like VINCENZO LO GRASSO, owner of DAL BAFFO European restaurant in Menlo Park, insists upon only the freshest and finest quality ingredients, that even includes seasonings. His herb rosemary is fresh-cut from the bush from a secret source. Lunch at the BAYHILL LOUNGE, Bayhill Shopping Center, offers a wide choice from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Ravioli and spaghetti with home made meat sauce and mushrooms are among the house specialties. Casual dancing nightly, with live music featuring the NEW TRI-SOUNDS Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights from 9 p.m.

Hana Japan offers choice of cooking

Whether you choose the hibachi-style cooking with all the action right in front of you in a flourish of flashing knives and spectacular meshing of ingredients, or the regular Japanese service, dinner at HANA JAPAN Japanese steak house in San Mateo is a tempting array of savory dishes created by Owners/chefs DENNY YUNE and AKIO YOSHIDA. ROSEBUD'S ENGLISH PUB, in the heart of San Francisco's glittering "Theater Row," is one of the Bay Area's most "celebrated" restaurants. You will usually find two or three birthday or anniversary parties in full swing most evenings. you can imagine how delighted dinner patrons at LEHR'S GREENHOUSE in San Francisco are when they discover that they get free admission to the adjoining Lehr's Cabaret Disco and Lehr's Bocce Ball Opera Room. There is also validated dinner parking for dinner guests. For a New York steak like you've probably never tried before, try the New York Steak "South American-style" as served at ROMANO'S in Rockaway Beach, Pacifica. It's easy to verify that everything is homemade at TILLIE'S 'LIL' FRANKFURT German and continental restaurant in Moss Beach. A peek into the kitchen shows Owner/chef TILLIE SCHOLTZ busily doing all the cooking from scratch.

The menu at PHIL LEHR'S STEAKERY, on the lower level of the S. F. Hilton Tower, goes far beyond the usual steak house fare. In addition to Phil's famed Pay-By-Ounce steaks, there are gourmet flamed-at-the-table steak dishes like Steak Diane and Pepper Steak Flambe. Also unexpected treats such as Lamb Rack Wellington for two, Fresh Salmon en Croute and Chicken Oscar. A unique feature of the menu at THE SKINNY GOURMET in San Mateo is that each dish has a careful description of the food item and an exact calorie count. Since Owner HISAM SHABOON has the secret for preparing and presenting healthy natural foods in tasty recipes, you can now eat heartily and save calories at the same time. Veal Parmigiana is one of the most popular choices on ALFREDO'S nightly "dinner specials" served from 5 p.m. every night (including Sunday) for only $3.95. Other choices on the special are Prime Rib and Roast of Chicken and all are served with pasta and bread and butter. Under the leadership of new Owner HAEKUN CHOI, the charming old CYPRESS HOUSE restaurant/cocktail lounge in picturesque Half Moon Bay is fast becoming one of the most popular choices for lunch, dinner, Sunday brunch and entertainment. Every Tuesday night is "Ladies Night," when all drinks are half-price for ladies from 6 to 9 p.m.

Book on terror

A terrorist is defined as one who aims to demoralize the government by violence and fear.

In a volume that will chill your bones the terrorists of the world sit for their portrait. "The Terrorists: Their Weapons, Leaders and Tactics (Facts on File, $14.95) is a disturbing expose, a sort of intelligence dossier on individual terrorists and ROUPS.

The authors, Christopher Dawson and Ronald Payne, have covered the major international terrorists operations of the past decade for the London Sunday Telegraph. They are regular consultants for both U.S. television networks and the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Among the books on terrorism that they have written, either as partners R WITH OTHER AUTHORS, ARE "The Human Jungle," "Black September" and "The Caribs Complex."

In a chapter that discusses the reasons for terrorism, Dobson and Payne write that all terrorists have a common heritage: "They have all come under the influence of those political thinkers who preach that violence is essential to make the world a better place for the masses."

In the ranks of terrorist groups there are idealists as well as criminals and psychopaths, each believing that violence provides the only true road to salvation.

Terrorists live in an atmosphere of revulsion against the luxuries of life. They live by self made morality codes. Usually their leaders are persons who can afford the intellectual luxury of launching themselves into violent politics without the pressures of poverty.

As a rule these leaders are the only members of their respective groups who have received a superior education. If the revolutions they inspire are successful they become powerful political leaders. For each leader there are thousands of common soldiers of terrorism who can expect only death, imprisonment or disillusion.

Although many of the terrorists in the ranks do not realize it, money is the fuel of terrorism. Thus Dobson and Payne write, "The belief that the use of terror is the poor man's method of waging war is no longer valid."

"The Palestinian, Latin American and West German groups that seek to destroy the bourgeois way of life enjoy lifestyles equal to those of the richest sections of the affluent society."

Throughout the world the main terrorist activities consist of:

- Murder by gunning down people in the streets.
- Assassination of political leaders and other well known people.
- Bombing of public places or the homes of private individuals.

- Kidnapping of prominent people for ransom or the release of prisoners.
- Hijacking aircraft and using the safety of the crew and passengers as a bargaining counter to secure the same ends.
- Armed bank robbery and raids of get money, weapons, documents, etc.

A large portion of "The Terrorists" is devoted to a discussion of weapons that are used by terrorist groups the world over.

Another section exposes the training and indoctrination skills used by terrorist groups.

Still another section discusses how democracy fights back.

Most of the book, however, is a who's who of terror wherein the terrorist groups in every country are described.

"The Terrorists" is a book about our times and about groups that wage an intense battle against our government and our way of life.

Daly City's Dito making it even better now

Ken Dito, the Daly City kid who made good on the airwaves, is making even better.

KNBR General Manager Bill Dwyer has announced that Dito will assume permanent custody of the popular KNBR Sportalk 68 sports call-in show on which Dito had originally appeared as a seasonal replacement for former host Hank Greenwald, when Greenwald relinquished the program because of his duties as one of the Giants' play-by-play broadcasters.

Dwyer says the decision to carry Dito year-round was based on two factors: "I wanted to give Hank a rest. It has been a long, hard season, and I wanted to keep Hank fresh for next baseball season. Coupled with that, Dito has been doing a fantastic job."

Notes from the Giants' clubhouse:

Billy North stand in the batter's cage and admonishes coach Dave Bristol, pitching batting practice, to quit throwing them so high. Reason? "Little" Billy North is continually hitting long, high drives into the stands in right field. Not just the lower stands. Some even go into the upper deck. And North is mock-angry at Bristol, because he wants to be pitched lower and on the corners so that he can practice moving the ball around the field.

After the game North strips for his shower. The "little guy" who before this year had never hit more than five home runs in a season, isn't so little. He's 5-11, weighs about 185, and every pound is muscle. He's bigger than Rocky Marciano was.

So why doesn't this powerful athlete go for the long ball in games? Take advantage of his God-given strength?

Remember, Ty Cobb was a big man for his day — about 6-1, 175. He, too, could hit them out at will in batting practice. But, like North, that wasn't his style. Like North, he felt he could be more productive using the bat as a tool rather than as a weapon.

Scene humorous: Rookie Greg Johnston arriving on the big league scene to find that he doesn't have the conventional roomy cubicle in which to dress. The cubicles are all taken. Johnson's "locker" is a steel storage cabinet gutted, its doors and drawers removed; standing in the middle of the locker room, stark, lonely, conspicuous. It's a helluva introduction to the biggies, but the good-natured Johnson accepts it and hopes that his locker doesn't have a sophomore jinx.

"At least all the writers notice me," he says, bravely.

Le Pacini

Scene, serious: Darrell Evans, after what has become a typical bad fielding night for him on the erratic Candlestick infield. He sits on a stool in his cubicle, shaking his head sadly and saying, "I'm getting gun-shy."

Notes from the 49ers' training facility, Redwood City:

Bill Walsh, perhaps the most honest head coach in the NFL, sits baking in the sun while being interrogated by sports writers who are in a mellow mood because they have just gorged themselves on a catered buffet lunch proffered by the 49ers.

He is asked how long it will take the three newly acquired defensive backs to integrate themselves fully into his system.

"Two years," says Walsh, a statement that is accompanied by gasps from newsmen who are accustomed to more optimism — false as it may be — from NFL coaches.

After Walsh makes the gathered assemblage laugh with one of his frequent wisecracks about the deficiencies of the 49ers, he catches himself and becomes serious for a moment.

"I have to watch myself. I'm acquiring the John McKay syndrome. You know, trying to make people laugh so that they won't notice your team."

Sudden thought. You'll sometimes see an infielder, for example, who has made an error that has led to an "unearned run" later apologize to the distraught pitcher.

But do you ever see a pitcher who has given up a homerun on a hanging curve go around apologizing to the team for HIS mistake?

Looking in back issues of publications can teach you never to totally believe what you read in print.

The May 5 issue of the Sporting News carried a big story on the formation of the Inter-American League, a six team summer pro baseball circuit formed in Latin American consisting in large part of players who had run out of organizations offering them chances, former big leaguers taking that one last shot, and kids breaking into pro ball.

The author of the story says that the league appears to be anything but a "fly-by-night" organization because the owners of each team posted $50,000 to defray costs of the commissioner's office and umpires, and that, as one example, "there is apparently plenty of money to support the league, (because) the Caracas ownership is worth $450 million."

The commissioner of the league is quoted as saying, "We are not worried about finishing the season (and here the author notes that the commissioner is amused by the question), because we have enough money to operate three or four years."

If you followed the fate of the Inter-American League, you know that it did indeed collapse a couple of months ago, leaving many players unpaid and stranded in foreign countries.

FOOTBALL TRIVIA:

Curly Lambeau, the legendary Green Bay Packer coach, was George Gipp's substitute at Notre Dame.

And speaking of Notre Dame, aside from a couple of the Ivy League teams, which loaded up on victories over far inferior opposition in the very early days of collegiate football, Michigan has won more than any college team, and is the only team to hold an edge over Notre Dame.

You may all know that the first televised major league baseball game was between Brooklyn and Cincinnati at Ebbets Field on August 26, 1939, and won by the Reds, 5-2.

But did you know that the first televised pro football game took place less than a month later, on October 22? And that it, too, involved a Brooklyn team? It was a contest between the Brooklyn — yes, that's right — Dodgers and the Philadelphia Eagles, and took place at — yes, that's right — Ebbets Field. Philadelphia beat the Dodgers, 23-14.

I don't know what any of the above proves, except that maybe Brooklyn professional teams never should have allowed themselves to be televised.

TAG END:

If only some of the athlete-critics of Candlestick could have been at Marino Pieretti's monthly luncheon recently to hear some of the old timers talk about playing conditions when they were coming up in the semi-pros (which were better than many of today's minor league circuits) and minors: the diamonds where they had to kick cows out of the outfield and then dodge their deposits during the game; the field that had railroad tracks running through it — and trains; the field where a center fielder chasing a fly one day disappeared, having fallen into a covered-over well.

Daly City's Flying Goose Making of a state champ

At the beginning of the season, the Flying Goose baseball team of Daly City was not only touted as the favorite to capture the North Peninsula Joe DiMaggio championship, but was considered the prime contender for the state championship.

Sunday the Daly City club fulfilled its championship expectations by capturing the state crown with a 25-7 thrashing of Napa in Fairfield. But the long road to the California title was not as easy as many forecasts said it would be.

Flying Goose started out the league season with a flourish, reeling off six consecutive wins after enjoying a marvelous preseason. However, during the streak the seeds of a bad harvest were laid.

Daly City had lost its top-notch double play combination of Dave Maxion and Nolan Smith, the former to an injury, and the latter to the United States Navy. Steve Evans' father received a promotion which necessitated a move to Anaheim, robbing DC of the services of its number three pitcher at the end of the regular season.

During one week in July the series of events, plus the law of averages, caught up with the flying DC squad. San Bruno, establishing itself as a legitimate title contender, took three consecutive games from Flying Goose.

"We thought after those losses our playoff hopes might go down the drain," standout pitcher Jeff Dietrich said.

"We either had to bounce back or pull an 'el foldo.' There was really no other way to go," said coach Tom King.

The following game, the team appeared to be on the brink of quitting against Millbrae. The bases were loaded in the bottom of the seventh inning with DC clinging to a 2-1 lead. Don Parks was brought in an unfamiliar situation — a relief role — to pitch to dangerous Millbrae slugger Bill Healy. He struck him out.

But even that did not set Flying Goose back on the track. In an ensuing contest against Millbrae, DC trailed 4-2 in the bottom of the seventh, struggling to avoid its fourth loss in five games. And it did, as Roger Homer stroked a dramatic three-run home run to net DC a 5-4 win, and put them back on the road to the state championship.

"When we won those two games, that was the turning point of the season," King said.

Indeed, Flying Goose went on from that point to secure first place and a playoff point which they did not need. Daly City rolled over South San Francisco and Millbrae to merit the state playoff berth.

"Everybody got along this year. One day we would have one hero and the next day it would be somebody else," Dietrich said. "Everybody carried everybody else. That is what made us a winner."

"We had no major weaknesses. Good baserunning, good hitting, good pitching, and good coaching."

Dietrich combined with Don Parks to form probably the best left-right pitching combo in the state. Dietrich posted a 13-1 record while Parks sported a 12-2 slate, each with earned run averages below two.

Flying Goose also had a reliable reliever in righthander Rich Baxley. "He is an underrated player. He comes in and gets them out. He just throws strikes all the time. I don't know how he does it," Dietrich said.

A surprising strong point of the Flying Goose squad was its hitting.

"Nobody thought we would have the kind of hitting we did. But we had a lot of guys nobody knew about like (Dave) Terry and (Doug) Price," Dietrich said.

But by the time the state tourney ran its course, names such as Price, Don Feblowitz, Greg Eagleton, and Maxion were becoming synonymous with offense. Flying Goose set a state tournament record with 51 runs in four games including a single game cord of 25 runs and a single inning mark of 13.

"We were very optimistic entering the tourney. Our league is one of the toughest plus we picked up three good players in (Greg) Funk, Feblowitz, and (Frank) Regello," Dietrich said.

Feblowitz and Funk fortified an already strong lineup while Regello added pitching depth. The three enjoyed an outstanding playoff series with Feblowitz batting .583 and earning Most Valuable Player recognition; Funk capturing All-Tourney honors at second base, and Regello being credited with the win in the title game.

King was lavish in his praise of the tournament's presentation.

"It was a very super tournament. The accommodations were the best I've ever seen. It's awfully hard when you're away from home to play comfortably, but the set-up at Travis was the best."

Tennis winners lose in finals

Daly City's Junior Davis Cup teams sponsored by Recreation Department won their division title this summer.

Both teams, boys 18 and under and boys 15 and under went on to the regional competition in San Jose, losing in the quarter finals.

The Junior Wightman Cup team finished the season with a 5-4 win over South San Francisco.

Holiday hours are revealed

The Daly City Recreation, Parks and Maintenance Department reminds residents that Westlake Park, Marchbanks Park and Gellert Park will have staff on duty from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sept. 3, Labor Day.

Park facilities will not be staffed Sept. 10 and all community centers and clubhouses will be closed on Sept. 3 and Sept. 10.

The city/school playground program is tentatively scheduled to begin the week of Sept. 17.

IT'S SIMPLE...

BUT WORKS WONDERS
A nail builds tall buildings... bridges canyons and rivers... makes toys... ties communication lines to utility poles... holds things together.

The newspaper is a simple idea that works wonders, too: It moves merchandise... doctors the economy... distributes jobs... finds people to do jobs... informs, educates and entertains.

When you want to sell, buy, rent, hire or announce... think of the simple idea that works.
